Peace, Or The Absence of War?

now to the climax of their joint effort—the peace con- in games.

The peace they have secured is different from the kind Americans had hoped it would be. They had hoped for peace free from the cynicism and suspicion that turned peace after World War I into an uneasy armistice. Instead, there are perhaps more cynicism and suspicion now than there were then

One particular circumstance has caused Americans to fear that they must look forward to peace as only the absence of war, instead of a state of international goodwill and cooperation. It may be argued by hindsight that nothing more ever was forthcoming, but many Americans expected real peace.

They are disappointed because the particular circumstance is the official attitude of Russia. They believed during the war, because their instinct for national and international goodwill prompted them to believe, that the Russian government would accept its newly-earned responsibility for leadership in co-

They realized that once the United States had become committed to Germany's defeat, emergence of the Soviet Union as the strongest individual European military power was inevitable. They believed that if a condition of mutual confidence between the Soviet Union and the United States could be attained, this would be the foundation for genuine peace-a kind of peace that could be more than an uneasy interval between wars, if Russia wanted it to be that way. To this end, the government, supported by the people gave Russia vast material support as an ally. Americans swallowed their doubts about future Russian policy, hoping to win Russian confidence.

Possibly American hopes were pitched too high in these aspirations for genuine international security and genuine peace. There is great danger that disap pointment may turn to disillusionment and that disillusionment may be reflected in the official attitude of the government in its dealings with the Soviet Union. The first great obstacle to winning the peace

There must be no insurmountable obstacles rec ognized, however, for the obvious reason that to do so would be to begin mental preparation for anothe war. If the United States honestly believes genuine peace is attainable eventually, it must support that belief with good examples and infinite patience. Patience does not mean appeasement beyond reason, but it bars firmness beyond reason.

We have learned at the cost of many lives and much wealth in two world wars that peace which is only the absence of war is no peace at all. We have learned that winning peace is even more important than winning wars-and that it is many times more difficult. Wars are waged. They are emotional and dom, tolerance and infinite patience. That is the charge which Secretary of State Byrnes and his advisers carry with them to Paris for the peace confer-

Uncle Sugar and Uncle Joe

No one can be sure it works, but the idea of making international friends by giving the other fellow a little the better of the bargain has its points.

It has earned for the United States the sobriquet of Uncle Sugar, and there are some who insist it also has earned for him the contempt of millions who never have known any other persuasion than force.

But there are few signs that it has earned the bit ter hatred that persuasion by force generates. The some of its responsibilities, but it probably is piling up park.

the United States. The world is being divided, it is said, between communism and profit capitalism. We submit that a large part of the world also is being divided between the techniques of Uncle Sugar and Uncle Joe and that sugar still draws more flies than ities for sturdy expansion, growth in major plans and vinegar, if the idea is to catch flies.

Hoosier Psychiatry

Maj-Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, who runs Service, thinks the present generation suffers from its parents' desire to see their kids have an easier childhood than Pa and Ma did. He also thinks the juven ile job of keeping the woodbox filled might have helped many of the 2,000,000 men rejected for mental instability to make a proper adjustment to life.

General Hershey is a Hoosier, and maybe that's Hoosier psychiatry. But maybe it would work. Daily chores, prescribed in moderation, are fine for disabusing the young mind of any notion that life is a tournament of roses-however much the young mind may resent them. ### Peace, Or The Absence of War?

The peace they have secured is different from the kind Americans had hoped it would be. They had hoped for peace free from the cynicism and suspicion that turned peace after World War I into an uneasy armistice. Instead, there are perhaps more cynicism and suspicion now than there were then.

One particular circumstance has caused Americans to fear that they must look forward to peace as only the absence of war, instead of a state of international goodwill and cooperation. It may be argued by hindsight that nothing more ever was forthcoming, but many Americans expected real peace.

They are disappointed because the particular circumstance is the official attitude of Russia. They believed during the war, because their instinct for national and international goodwill prompted them to believe, that the Russian government would accept its newly-earned responsibility for leadership in cooperative security.

They realized that once the United States had become committed to Germany's defeat, emergence of the Soviet Union as the strongest individual European military power was inevitable. They believed that if a condition of mutual confidence between the Soviet Union and the United States could be attained, this would be the foundation for genuine peace-a kind of peace that could be more than an uneasy interval between wars, if Russia wanted it to be that way. To this end, the government, supported by the people gave Russia vast material support as an ally. Americans swallowed their doubts about future Russian pol icy, hoping to win Russian confidence.

Possibly American hopes were pitched too high in these aspirations for genuine international security and genuine peace. There is great danger that disappointment may turn to disillusionment and that disillusionment may be reflected in the official attitude of the government in its dealings with the Soviet Union. The first great obstacle to winning the peace

There must be no insurmountable obstacles rec ognized, however, for the obvious reason that to do so would be to begin mental preparation for another war. If the United States honestly believes genuin peace is attainable eventually, it must support that belief with good examples and infinite patience. Patience does not mean appeasement beyond reason but it bars firmness beyond reason.

We have learned at the cost of many lives an much wealth in two world wars that peace which is learned that winning peace is even more importan than winning wars-and that it is many times mo difficult. Wars are waged. They are emotional and exciting. Peace is experienced. It calls for logic, wisom, tolerance and infinite patience. That is the charge which Secretary of State Byrnes and his advisers carry with them to Paris for the peace confer-

Uncle Sugar and Uncle Joe

No one can be sure it works, but the idea of making international friends by giving the other fellow a little the better of the bargain has its points.

It has earned for the United States the sobriquet of Uncle Sugar, and there are some who insist it also has earned for him the contempt of millions who is spending a week with her aunt, Mrs. Charles Monnever have known any other persuasion than force.

But there are few signs that it has earned the bitter hatred that persuasion by force generates. The United States may be making a horrible fumble of sociates held a picule supper Thursday at Centennial some of its responsibilities, but it probably is piling up park.

The world is being divided, it is said, between communism and profit capitalism. We submit that a large part of the world also is being divided between the techniques of Uncle Sugar and Uncle Joe and that sugar still draws more flies than ities for sturdy expansion, growth in major plans and vinegar, if the idea is to catch flies.

Hoosier Psychiatry

Maj.-Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, who runs Selective Service, thinks the present generation suffers from its parents' desire to see their kids have an easier childhood than Pa and Ma did. He also thinks the juvenile job of keeping the woodbox filled might have helped many of the 2,000,000 men rejected for mental instability to make a proper adjustment to life.

General Hershey is a Hoosier, and maybe that's Hoosier psychiatry. But maybe it would work. Daily chores, prescribed in moderation, are fine for disabusing the young mind of any notion that life is a tournament of roses-however much the young mind may resent them. Dismantle Old Otis

Plant In Cleveland

(By Associated Press)

Extremes of a distraught mother's emotions are caught by the news camera as Mrs. Myrtle Blankenship, 18, of Newton, Ga., is pictured, left, in police station after reporting the kidnaping of her 11month-old daughter in a Bluefields, W. Va., bus station. Several hours later, the baby was recovered and, right, the dull despair in the mother's face is transformed to shining joy. Police held Marie Delk, of Sacramento, Calif., on kidnaping charge after child was found in her sister's home at Maybury, W. Va.

New Ruling Reese stated that henceforth all protests made must be indicated during the game, immediately after the protested play is completed and that the umpire must be notified that the game is being finished under protest. Heretofore, the locals rules have given protesting managers 24 hours to submit their case to the commissioner. The new rule will still require the managers to have a written protest in the hands of the commissioner within the 24 hour period, but stipulates that verbal protest must be made on the spot.

The winners scored three times in the first inning and twice in the Jaycees fifth. Four errors by the Eagles Eagles made their task easier.

Johnny McQuiston broke a string of six consecutive games in which he had granted his opponents five runs and limited the Eagles to three on six hits. He walked none and struck out two. It was his 10th victory of the season.

His opponent. Hank Dermotta, also yielded six hits, but he walked McQuiston led his team at the

managed to hit safely more than once, but Big John "Tony" Dermetta, pinch-hitting in the seventh, drove out a tremendous home run with a mate aboard. That, however, ended the Eagle scering. Although they lost, the defeat did not dron the Eagles in the standings, since Commissioner Joe Reese, in a hearing Monday night, up-held their protest against Leetonia in their game of last Friday. Reese ruled that the game will have to be played over again this week.

New Ruling

Reese stated that henceforth all protests made must be indicated during the game, immediately after the protested play is completed and that the umpire must be notified that the game is being finished

Heretofore, the locals rules have given protesting managers 24 hours to submit their case to the commissioner. The new rule will still require the managers to have a written protest in the hands of the commissioner within the 24 hour period, but stipulates that verbal protest must be made on the spot.
